

The above photograph was taken on November 2, 1999 at the Government of the District of Columbia television production facility at 2217 14th Street, NW. It shows a general view of a portion of Studio A.

The above photograph was taken on November 2, 1999 at the Government of the District of Columbia television production facility at 2217 14th Street, NW. It shows a general view of another portion of Studio A.

The above photograph was taken on November 2, 1999 at the Government of the District of Columbia television production facility at 2217 14th Street, NW. It shows two of the television cameras used in Studio A.

The above photograph was taken on November 2, 1999 at the Government of the District of Columbia television production facility at 2217 14th Street, NW. It shows a close view of lighting instruments with safety chains and using gauze filtration to soften the lights in Studio A.

The above photograph was taken on December 21, 1999 at the Government of the District of Columbia television production facility at 2217 14th Street, NW. It shows a general view of video monitors, video switcher, waveform monitor, vectorscope, and associated equipment used in the control room for Studio A and electronic editing.

The above photograph was taken on November 2, 1999 at the Government of the District of Columbia television production facility at 2217 14th Street, NW. It shows video tape recorders used in the control room for Studio A and electronic editing.

The above photograph was taken on November 2, 1999 at the Government of the District of Columbia television production facility at 2217 14th Street, NW. It shows the control panels for production editing and special effects used in the control room for Studio A.

The above photograph was taken on November 2, 1999 at the Government of the District of Columbia television production facility at 2217 14th Street, NW. It shows an audio console, a turntable, and associated equipment used in this audio editing room connected to the control room for Studio A. An announce booth/room can be seen through the window.

The above photograph was taken on November 2, 1999 at the Government of the District of Columbia television production facility at 2217 14th Street, NW. It shows a tape recorder, equalizers, patch panels, and associated equipment used in the audio editing room connected to the control room for Studio A.

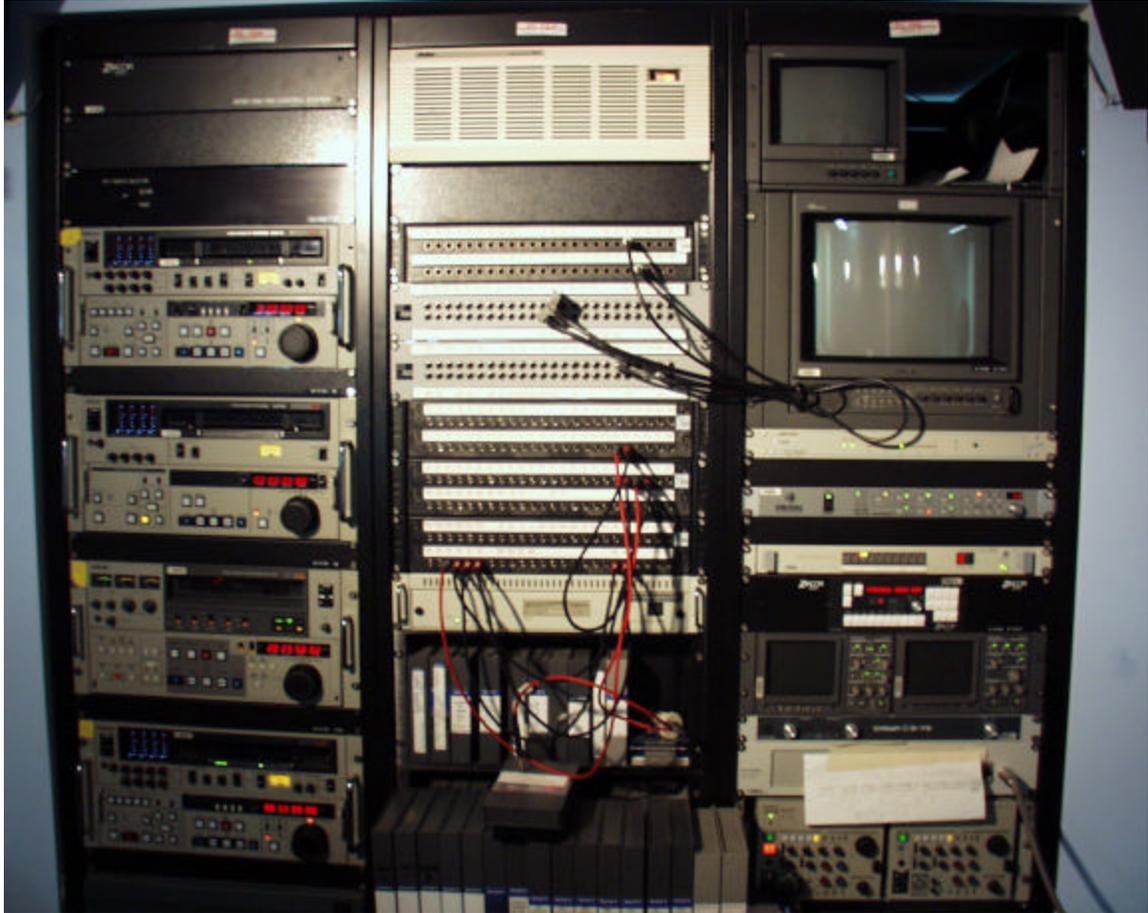

The above photograph was taken on November 2, 1999 at the Government of the District of Columbia television production facility at 2217 14th Street, NW. It shows video monitors, a waveform monitor, a vectorscope, video switcher, character generator and graphics controllers, and associated equipment used in the control room for Studio B.

The above photograph was taken on November 2, 1999 at the Government of the District of Columbia television production facility at 2217 14th Street, NW. It shows a closer view of some of the video monitors, audio recorders, character generator and graphics controllers, editing controllers, and associated equipment used in the control room for Studio B. Also, a view of Studio B can be seen in the background.

The above photograph was taken on November 2, 1999 at the Government of the District of Columbia television production facility at 2217 14th Street, NW. It shows a closer view of the video production switcher used in the control room for Studio B.

The above photograph was taken on December 21, 1999 at the Government of the District of Columbia television production facility at 2217 14th Street, NW. It shows video tape recorders, camera controls, waveform monitors, video monitors, patch panels, and associated equipment used in the control room for Studio B.

The above photograph was taken on November 2, 1999 at the Government of the District of Columbia television production facility at 2217 14th Street, NW. It shows the audio console, a video monitor, and some associated equipment used in the audio control booth next to the control room for Studio B. Also, a view of Studio B can be seen in the background.

The above photograph was taken on November 2, 1999 at the Government of the District of Columbia television production facility at 2217 14th Street, NW. It shows a video tape recorder, audio tape recorders, patch panels, amplifiers, and associated equipment used in the audio control booth next to the control room for Studio B.

The above photograph was taken on November 2, 1999 at the Government of the District of Columbia television production facility at 2217 14th Street, NW. It shows video tape recorders, video monitors, and some associated equipment used in a dub station room.

The above photograph was taken on November 2, 1999 at the Government of the District of Columbia television production facility at 2217 14th Street, NW. It provides a closer view of the editing video tape recorder in the dub station room shown in the previous photograph.

The above photograph was taken on November 2, 1999 at the Government of the District of Columbia television production facility at 2217 14th Street, NW. It shows a video monitor, waveform monitor, vectorscope, audio panel, video tape recorder, and some associated equipment used in this dub station.

The above photograph was taken on December 21, 1999 at the Government of the District of Columbia television production facility at 2217 14th Street, NW. It shows a video tape recorder, video monitors, and associated equipment used in this computer based non-linear electronic editing system.

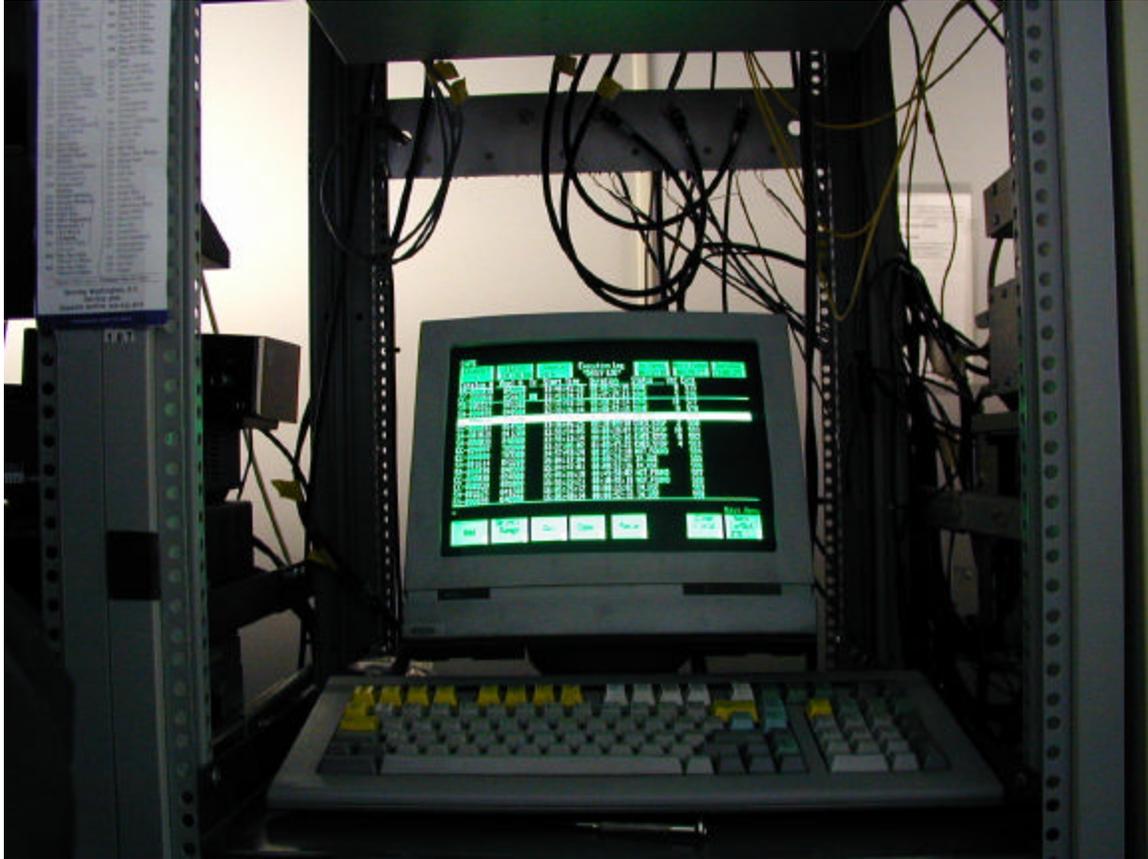

The above photograph was taken on November 2, 1999 at the Government of the District of Columbia television production facility at 2217 14th Street, NW. It shows the area being used for video tape storage and as the master control room for programming the two access channels served from this facility.

The above photograph was taken on November 2, 1999 at the Government of the District of Columbia television production facility at 2217 14th Street, NW. It shows a general view of the video tape recorders and associated equipment used in the master control room.

The above photograph was taken on November 2, 1999 at the Government of the District of Columbia television production facility at 2217 14th Street, NW. It shows a closer view of some of the video tape recorders used in the master control room.

The above photograph was taken on November 2, 1999 at the Government of the District of Columbia television production facility at 2217 14th Street, NW. It shows a view of the automated program control system that directs what programming is transmitted from this master control room to the two television access channels programmed from this facility.

The above photograph was taken on December 21, 1999 at the Government of the District of Columbia television production facility at 2217 14th Street, NW. It shows a general view of the video tape recorders and associated equipment in the master control room.